How to Get Your Homework Done

11/2/13

Introduction:

Homework. It's one of the most hated things by kids, but why? Work is part of everyday life and the older you get the more work you are assigned. Completing homework makes good blood between the teacher and her students. Its a way of showing the teacher you're responsible and they will realize it. They will stop spoon feeding you and stop nagging you to do homework because they will trust that you can complete it on time. Homework completion is a good start to being a responsible person who is reliable. Sure not doing homework today is not a big deal, but when your grown up and you don't do work at a job, you will lose respect from your boss or potentially get fired.

Purpose:

After this procedure you will be able to stop making excuses, stop procrastinating and get your homework done on time.

Materials/Equipment:

- Advocacy
- A Bookbag or Backpack
- A Quiet Work Space
- Organized Utilities(Pencil, Pencil Crayons)
- Commitment

5. Keep your utilities in an organized space where you will remember. This will save some poor excuses, come on everyone has a pencil.

6. Make homework your first priority. The simple "I'm too busy" won't get you out of it. The older you get , the more homework you get so make it your first priority. Even if you have chores or you have to help someone out, they will understand and let it go, but your teacher won't because homework is the only real work a kid has.

7. Along with the step before, be committed to doing homework to your best ability. Even if you get it done, you need to do it the best you can. It means nothing if you can write a few words, the teacher needs the best work so they know a student can do it. Any teacher also won't accept work not done to the best ability.

Conclusion:

Now you can get your homework done without excuses and not be worried when the teacher says "this is for homework." It won't just happen overnight, but if you keep working on these steps you will be a responsible, model student.

Method:

1. Having someone that believes in you gives hope in yourself that you can do homework. This can be an encouraging parent or teacher.

2. As soon as you get assigned homework, put it in your bookbag or backpack. This can prevent lame excuses such as "I forgot it" or "I lost it."

3. Set yourself a specific time for homework everyday. No teacher likes hearing "I got no time," because anyone can make time.

4. Work in a quiet place with no distractions. If you're anything like me, procrastination is a big problem so a quiet workplace would be very useful.

I AM poem

I am artistic and strong
I wonder why He took my father
I hear the rumbling of a dragon
I see Olympus the Greek God's home
I want to feel my father's touch again
I am artistic and strong

I pretend to have a sister
I feel an alien on my head
I touch my father's face
I worry that my mother is going to leave me
I cry for my father back
I am artistic and strong

I understand that I can never have my father back
I say God is the one who is true
I dream of being in my fathers' arms once again
I try to stay strong for my family
I hope to have a whole family
I am artistic and strong
